No. 427, Finance, dated the 8th May 1922, instructions were issued to heads of departments and other officers concerned in regard to the return to the India Store Depot, London, of the packing accounts of stores received from England and reports of damages and losses. The Government are informed that a large proportion of packing accounts is never returned by officers in India and thus the two papers which the return of such documents serves, namely, that they afford evidence of the stores having been duly received and form the basis for effecting recovery in cases where stores are damaged or short delivered, are not fulfilled. The officers concerned should take steps for the prompt return in future of the packing accounts within the period of six months allowed in G.O. No. 450, Finance, dated 8th September 1921.

(4) Whenever, for the purpose of making them to execute such work, the local or road authority or company, body or person, shall so require, the promoter shall either stop traffic on the tramway to which the notice shall refer where such traffic would otherwise interfere with such work, or shall close up and secure such tramway at his own risk and cost during the execution of the work. Provided that such work shall always be completed with all possible expedition by the local or road authority or company, body or person; and any difference as to the necessity of such work shall be settled by arbiters provided in section 35 of the Act for the settlement of differences between the promoter and authorities or persons.

(5) No local or road authority, company, body or person shall execute such work, so far as it immediately affects the tramway, except under the superintendence of the promoter, unless he refuse or neglect to give such superintendence at the time specified in the notice for the commencement of the work, or refuse to discontinue the same during the progress of the work, and every such authority, company, body or person, shall execute such work at the or his own expense and to the reasonable satisfaction of the promoter.

[Ber-beri—Cause and prevalence—Memorandum published for general information.]

No. 448.—The appended memorandum on the cause and prevalence of the disease known as 'Ber-beri' is published for general information.

3. The memorandum will also be published in English and in the vernacular in the Gazette, Vinsgapatam, Gaddavari, Kistara, Quntar and Nellore District. Gazette, as the disease is reported to be widely prevalent in these districts. The Senior Translator to Government is requested to furnish the Superintendent, Government Press, with the necessary instructions.

APPENDIX.

Memorandum on the cause and prevalence of the disease known as Ber-beri.

Ber-beri occurs mainly amongst the down-trodden people of India, the Malay States, Dutch India, Philippine Islands, China and Japan. The disease has been known in the Far East since the earliest times of which any record exists (3667 B.C.), but its prevalence has greatly increased since the introduction of white-rice-cultivation. Generally considered to be a tropical disease, ber-beri is by no means so limited in its distribution.

Symptoms.

The disease is characterized by aches, nervous and heart symptoms and digestive troubles. In the 'dry' form there is a prostration and great wasting of the limbs; in the 'wet' form there is a dropsical condition of the lower limbs; in severe cases the brain and nerves are also affected. The departure from normal health is usually very gradual, beginning with such vague symptoms as loss of appetite and debility.

Association with diet.

During the period 1878 to 1885 it was recognized by certain medical men that this disease in the East was common among the poorer people living almost entirely upon a rice diet and also among the richer people whose food was much more varied. Wernich (1878) thought that the bulkiness of a rice diet interfered with the assimilation of food. Van Lennep (1888) suggested that it might result from food containing too little fat and protein; the diet of the natives was usually very poor in fat and in nitrogenous food such as meat, milk and eggs. It has since been shown that ber-beri can develop on a diet containing plenty of fat, so that an insufficiency of fat cannot be a contributory cause.

Takaki (1893-44). Medical Inspector-General of the Japanese Navy, believed that the prevalence of ber-beri in the Japanese fleet was caused by nitrogen (i.e., protein) starvation. After a great deal of opposition he persuaded the naval authorities to make a change in the men's food. The quantity of rice was reduced, and in its place there was issued more meat, fish, flour, milk and vegetables, including beans; the cost of the new ration was double that of the old. On the old ration 32 per cent of the men in the navy had suffered from ber-beri. The new ration was introduced in 1894, and in the first year the number of cases of ber-beri fell from 38 to 0.5 per cent. Three years after the changed diet there was not a single case of ber-beri, although the personnel of the navy had meanwhile been doubled.

Takaki's wonderful success in eliminating ber-beri from the Japanese navy attracted much attention to his theory that nitrogen starvation was the cause, but it is now known that it was not the meat, but some constituent of the barley, which prevented ber-beri in the Navy.

A new conception of the origin of ber-beri was given by Eijkman (1897), who noticed that some fowls kept in a prison in Java, of which he was medical officer, fell ill and suffered from a peculiar form of prostration, which he called Polysarcemata poliostrum. No micro-organisms could be found which might be the cause of the disease. Eijkman discovered that these birds were fed upon the husks of the boiled rice from the prison. He therefore carried out feeding experiments upon birds with different kinds of rice. Some were fed upon the whole rice grain, some upon half-polished rice and some upon polished white rice. Only those birds which had been fed upon the polished rice for three or four weeks developed the disease; they were cured by being given either the whole grain or the half-polished rice, or the polishes (rice husks).

Eijkman, with the help of his colleague Vorhees, put the results of these experiments to a practical test in 1901, when in Java, containing altogether about a quarter of a million prisoners. The husks of some prisoners were given polished rice, of others half-polished rice and of still others a mixture of the two. In the prisons receiving polished rice, 1 in 25 of the inmates had ber-beri; in the prisons receiving mixed rice, 1 in 418 had ber-beri; while in those receiving half-polished rice 1 in 38,693 had ber-beri. The results with both birds and prisoners were thus very conclusive.

These Dutch observations also proved that wheat, gram, rye, barley, whole rice and potatoes lost their power of protecting them from ber-beri if they were heated to 215° to 120° C. to sterilize them in order to eliminate micro-organisms as the cause of the disease.

The whole rice grain or paddy consists of three parts: the external husk, the pericarp or skin, covering skin of the seed; the germ or embryo plant; the endosperm or store of food for the young plant. The endosperm forms the greater part of the grain and contains chiefly of starch.

* The term ber-beri will be used to denote the dried variety of ber-beri and other varieties of ber-beri and rice and to denote the green parts of ber-beri or rice.

The outer endosperm layers contain the so-called aleurone grains, composed of protein, fat and other substances; this part of the grain is of special importance and is known as the subpericarpal layer. The germ lies at one end of the endosperm, from which it really becomes detached in the pericarpal layer. The removal or retention of the pericarp, subpericarpal layer and germ is the main difference in the various processes of preparing the grain for food.

Rice is often processed at home by hand until the husks are detached and can be blown away. Some of the pericarp is removed by this process, but if it is done so early the rest is often picked off by hand, as when rice is polished. The husk-shelling does not interfere with the germ and subpericarpal layer, the important parts of the grain, and does not cause ber-beri.

Polished (or milled) white rice is prepared in machine mills and is the rice commonly sold in Malaya. The rice bran, or polubings, contains the pericarp, germ and most of the outer layers of the endosperm; it is used as pig and cattle feed. Machine-polished rice may cause ber-beri.

Parboiled (or steam) rice is prepared by soaking in water for forty-eight hours and then steaming for five minutes (toasting). This process causes the pericarp and germ to adhere to the endosperm, so that they are not completely removed by the subsequent machine-milling. The final product is yellowish and translucent and often has an unpleasant smell; it is therefore avoided by many people who suffer in consequence from ber-beri; where parboiled rice is extensively used as in Tanjong ber-beri is common, where polished rice is extremely rare as in Kinta ber-beri is common.

In spite of all the evidence that polished white rice was the cause of the disease, scepticism still existed. Strong and Oswall in 1912 therefore carried out another experiment. They were able to cure 25 prisoners under sentence of death at Balingh prison. The prisoners were isolated and every precaution taken to exclude the possibility of infection. Ber-beri developed in 15 out of 17 prisoners fed on white rice, but there was only one doubtful case amongst prisoners fed on whole milled rice. Strong and Oswall were thus convinced that the disease was of dietary origin.

Ber-beri is more prevalent at certain seasons and in certain damp and low-lying districts. The seasonal epidemic appears at different times in different countries and hence a direct relation to the available food-supply. Volstead found that in the Philippines the incidence of the disease was dependent upon the rice crop; if last season's supply of home-grown, hand-milled rice was used up before the new rice was ready, imported highly-milled rice had to be used until the next harvest, and the cases of ber-beri were more numerous the longer this interval.

The best way to avoid ber-beri is to use a varied diet containing anti-ber-beri substances and not to restrict the diet too rigidly to machine-milled rice; use home-milled or parboiled rice where possible.

Distribution of the anti-ber-beri substance.

The work of the several investigators has shown that facts can be divided into two groups—

Those containing anti-ber-beri substance.—

Rice polubings (rice bran),
Unmilled rice (unpolished),
Potatoes, whole,
Banana, dried,
Barley, whole,
Rye flour,
Milk,
Yeast,
Figs,
Millet,
Lentils,
Buckwheat,
Graham.

Those not containing anti-ber-beri substance.—

Polished barley,
Rice,
Refined foods,
Polished white rice.

The term fee for the M.L. degree (Branches I, II and IV) will be Rs 30; for the B.L. and F.L. degree will be Rs 100 and for the Philosophy class Rs 30. For Mathematics, Urdu and all other students belonging to the backward classes or those specified in article 15 of the Constitution will be required to pay only half the above fee, provided they produce at the day of admission a certificate issued by a Backward Classes representative of the District Government of Madhya Pradesh.

* An applicant will be admitted to the College unless he presents, together with his application, a transfer certificate showing: (a) the name of the candidate in full; (b) the date of birth as stated in the admission register; (c) the date on which he was admitted to an school or college and residence; (d) the name in which he studied at the time of leaving it; (e) the subjects in which he was examined; and (f) the marks obtained in each of the subjects in which he was examined.

Classes he was employed. In the second class being employed in a S.L. Class when a certificate of address is required, the certificate should be signed and the signature verified and not from any other member.

Students, especially who do not know themselves on that day, will be asked to present previously explained will be able to have the same passport.

In any case, the admission will be provisional and will only be confirmed after the meeting of the accepted students.

There is a hostel attached to the College. All applications for admission into the College District College hostel should be sent to the Warden of the hostel.
